WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

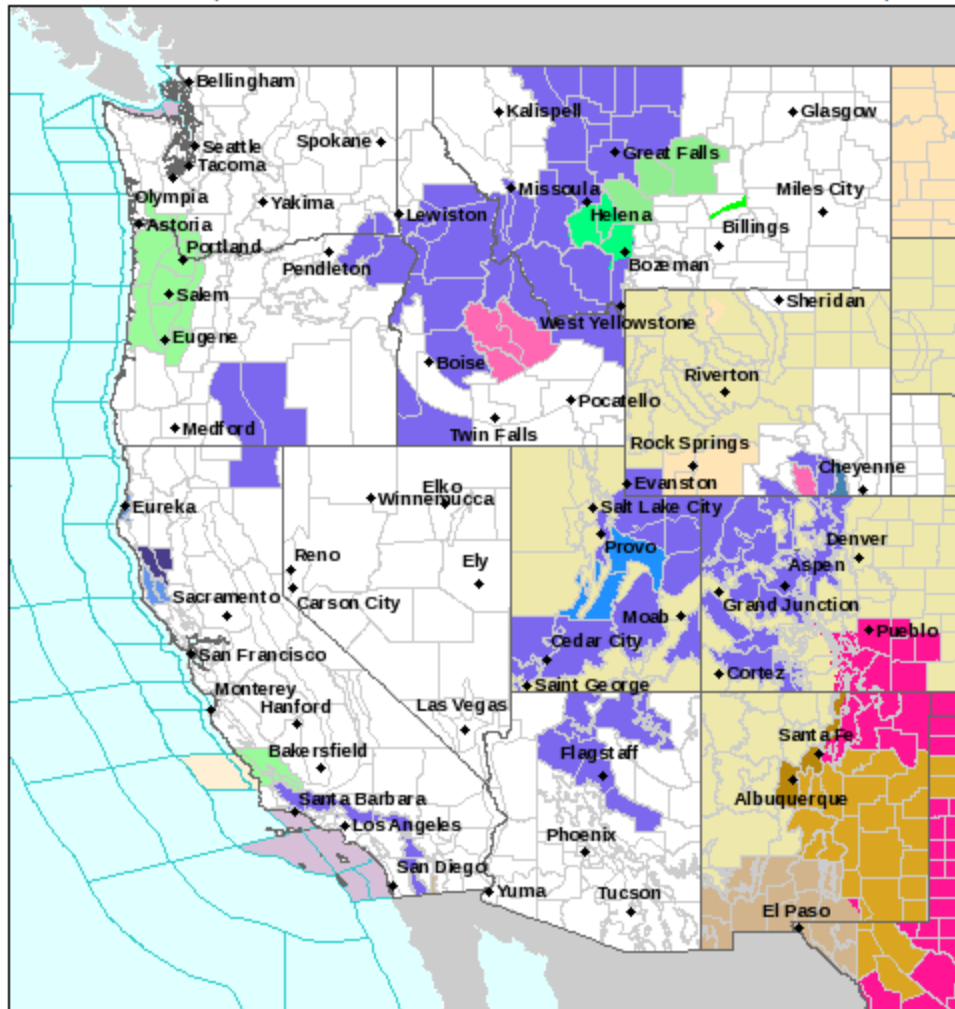

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The wet unsettled weather will continue through this evening with more showers and thunderstorms this afternoon. The region will have a few days of drier weather through mid week. A Pacific storm is expected to arrive Tuesday afternoon with strong gusty winds and high snow levels. This will be a warmer and wetter storm system. This storm will impact the region through the end of the week with heavy precipitation and strong winds. Late in the week colder air will move in and drop snow levels to 1,500-3,000 ft. again.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A cold storm system will continue to produce light to moderate rain at times across Southwest portions of the region through this evening. Snow levels will range from 3,500 and 4,000 ft. Snow accumulations of 3 to 6 in. will be likely for elevations above 5,000 ft. with minor accumulations possible on Interstate 5 near the Grapevine. Winter driving conditions (chains) expected in the mountains. There will be a break in the wet pattern tomorrow through Tuesday. After that there is the potential for a more significant storm next week. There is moderate certainty in timing and strength of this storm system. Moderate to possibly heavy rainfall will likely occur sometime between late Tuesday and Thursday night, with the heaviest rainfall currently projected to occur on Wednesday. Rainfall rates could potentially exceed USGS thresholds, bringing a threat for debris flows in recent burn areas.
